scheme in November:

The Radical leaders and strikers in Tennessee are impressed with the idea of their masters, that by shrewd management the Democracy of this State can be so disorganized and so split into local factions in August that they cannot be brought together in time for a fight in November. In circulars from the National headquarters, in articles in the New York Times and Tribmes. In argument after argument in the Knoxville Whig, this idea has been sown and cultivated in Tennessee, until many Radical leaders look with confidence to gaining three congressmen in this State through the presumed Democratic split in the August contest. To this end the Hadicals in Tennessee have been ordered to affiliate with Independent, National or any other new party movement that promises to distingerate the Lemocratic party. Hence we see in Davidson, in Sheiby, and in these and other counties, these identical instructions faithfully followed.

GENERAL O'NEIL

Denounces Turner's Statements as to Him False and Untrue, and Declares Him Low, Mean and Contemptible, and Unworthy of Public Con-

EDITORS APPEAL-The gratuitous and inamous attack upon me by G. P. M. Turner in yesterday evening's Herald is false in every particular. I never stated, at any fimr place, "that I had three hundred dollars my pocket, and expect four hundred more to-morrow, and I am going to use it, and I have control of twenty two votes, which I will transfer to any person who will transfer me as many for my man for attorney-general." This is an unmitigated falsehood, and I pronounce its author a falsifier. I did not have in my pocket three hundred dollars, nor did I say I expected four hundred dollars or any other amount on "to-morrow." also false that I was drunk at Balls's hotel or elsewhere. As to any law suits between M naturalization when he produces a copy of naturalization, and it is objected to on acwith this political canvass, nor do they in terest the public. And when Mr. Turner brings these before the public with a view to injure me, and, by insinuation, to injure my friend and his competitor, he show himsel to be as low, mean and contemptible as he at No. 94 Madison street.

W. J. SMITH,

Of Memphis, Caned by Captain Robin son, of St. Louis, for Alleged Robbery and Oppression During the War.

Little Rock Democrat: Sunday forenoon

little unpleasantness at the Capital hotel

Memphis, being the concluding chapter of a lifficulty of the night before. Captain Robinson assaulted his opponent with a hickory cane, just inside the main hotel entrance, but, when striking, slipped and fell, at the same time receiving two or three blows on his head from a loaded stick in the hands of Smith. The men were separated; Robinson's wounds were dressed; he wasn't satisfied, and returned shortly with a loaded re volver, which he presented at Smith's head. The chief-of-police happened to be present. rushed in, arrested Captain Robinson, and St. Louis, and has a room in the Gazette building. He says cause of the trouble dates back to the days of the was great excitement on shore during th war; the place, Salisbury, Tennessee, where Smith was first a Confederate and afterward harges him with stealing his mules and other property, under pretense of a demand from the Federal army, and converting them to his own use and benefit. General Smith we met in room No. 41, a few moments preious to the departure of the Memphis train. He disclaimed all knowledge of the alleged thefts, and said he only knew Captain Robinson by reputation; did not know him when he was attacked. He continued: "Robinson said my soldiers stole sixty dollars from him during the war, and I told him I knew noth ing of it. My wife's home was burned by the 'rebels' at Grand Junction, and the Federal Act 1870, chapter 10, section 1. They returned the fire, one pullet taking effect in his arm. Mallinee then ran toward the northeast, through a calf lot, and had just crossed the fence when a shot from Thornhill prostrated him for a moment, when he immediately arose and ran through a sugar-cane patch. The officers pursued, firing several times, but without ffect, owing to the thickness of the tall cane. All this time Mallinee's wife was vigorously
